Letter From Minnesota State University Farm

WHITE PINE RUST IS SILENCT IN MINNESOTA

White pine rust has disappeared in 11,650,000 acres of Minnesota's 116,000,000 acres of white pine, according to the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station. The rust, which is a disease of pine trees, is controlled by the use of resistant varieties of pines. The disease has been eradicated in the state because of the cooperation of the farmers and the state government in controlling it.
