Bricky's girl wears silks and satins,
Bricky's girl is rich and snappy,
My girl wears calico;
My girl is stout and low;
My girl is poor but good.

Seemed a breeze on the desert
And jumped out the window,
With Normal nights.

We might forget.

The sleighs will leave from Morey
And ringing looks at your figure again.

Lumber Prices Have Reached the Bottom

Now It’s Up to You

We desire to present to the purchasing public our view of the lumber situation, gained from much study of and close touch with the whole retail and wholesale trade. And our honest belief is this:

Lumber Prices are now as low as they will ever be.

That’s the situation in a nutshell. Reductions in price of 10% to 45% have taken place on almost every item of lumber. The mills on the coast are producing lumber at so narrow a margin of profit that many of them are closed down because they cannot operate under present conditions. A number of mills are operating at an actual loss, which is an unusual condition and cannot long exist. Should there be an active demand for lumber, there will simply be a lumber shortage and a consequent rise in prices.

The scale of prices is about the same as before the rise in 1918. The only chance for a change in prices is upward. Therefore, if you need buildings, we say frankly that we think you will gain nothing by waiting for lumber to decline further—and you WILL lose the time you wait. If you prefer, you can order your lumber direct from the mill, and when the time is right—order again. But the time for action is now.
