What If Voting Age Is Lowered?

By JOHN R. BOHRE

President Johnson's statement outlining the constitutional amendment to lower the voting age from 21 to 18 was a significant step towards expanding the electorate. The amendment has the potential to increase voter turnout, especially among young people, who are often the demographic that has historically had lower participation rates.

In order to understand the implications of this amendment, it is important to consider the reasons why people choose not to vote. One common reason is the perception of the political process as and irrelevant. If the voting age were lowered, it could encourage more people to engage in the political process, leading to a more informed electorate.

However, there are also concerns about the impact of lowering the voting age. Some argue that younger voters may lack the necessary experience and understanding to make informed decisions. This could potentially lead to decisions that have negative consequences for the country.

In the end, the decision to lower the voting age is a complex one that requires careful consideration of both the potential benefits and drawbacks. It is clear, however, that the issue of lowering the voting age is one that should be further studied and debated.

Wisconsin Wild Turkey

The present winter has reduced Wisconsin wild turkey stock to such a point that the annual hunting season will be closed this spring.

Provisions at the Department of Natural Resources are that the turkey population has been affected by severe winter conditions and limited emphasis of game of any kind, especially the older birds, has been the result of 1968-69. Efforts are being made to keep the buck numbers in balance.

C. F. Smith, Resident Manager at Menomonie Valley, and the manager of several other units in the state have been able to control the turkey in these districts. Conditions have been less favorable in the southern districts, however, and present range limitations have been partially overcome in those units. An effort to control the turkey population in the southern districts has been made, but they are still in the experimental stage.

The surviving birds have been feeding on open corn and briar hedges, but they have been taking on the roads. No one will overlook the fact that the population has been reduced. DEAR ABBY:

Hasty Marriage
One Long Misery

By AMI RHEIN

DEAR ABBY: Fifteen years ago when I became pregnant, my husband and I both said that we would never marry nor have children. A few months later, however, he proposed and we were married. We have one child now, and I regret every minute of the marriage. I would like to divorce him, but he is not much interested in doing so. He is very stubborn and won't give in. He has no intention of paying me spousal support. I have been talking to a lawyer, but he says that since we were married only fifteen years ago, I will not get any spousal support. Is there anything else I can do to get the divorce I so desperately need? Dear Abby, don't allow people to believe they don't need church in order to get their morals straight, because they are wrong and hurtful. We all need admonition to repent for our sins. Faith to bolster our own.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the wife whose husband refuses to let her see their child is particularly distressing. The girl was the aggressor, and this poor man might have asked them if they care for any refreshments. My husband has never really accepted the responsibility of childrearing. He has always been the first to buy a new car, make new friends, and go on vacations. He has never been a good provider, and my children are growing up without the love and guidance of both parents. My husband is always telling me that he is the only breadwinner, and that I should stay home and take care of the children. I am tired of being responsible for everything, and I don't want to continue living this way. Can you help me find a way to make my husband understand his responsibilities as a father and husband?

DEAR ABBY: I was just reading a letter that was supposed to be from you. It was about a responsible, childless couple who really want to get married. I pleaded with the man responsible for this. But he was so cruel and critical of the boy that I was afraid he would hurt the boy. I think he is good, is it possible to get married without having children? I am not sure if this is possible, but I would like to try. I have decided to let you settle it. I am not sure if this is the best thing to do, but I need a second opinion. Thank you for your help.

DEAR ABBY: I have written to you before, and I would like to write to you again. I have been married for five years, and I am concerned about my husband's spending habits. He spends all our money on himself, and I have no money to buy groceries or clothes. I have tried to talk to him about it, but he never listens. I have decided to tell him to go out and get a job, but I am not sure if that is the best thing to do. Can you help me find a way to get my husband to understand that he needs to take care of our finances?

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you because I am angry. My husband has never accepted the responsibility of childrearing. He has always been the first to buy a new car, make new friends, and go on vacations. He has never been a good provider, and my children are growing up without the love and guidance of both parents. My husband is always telling me that he is the only breadwinner, and that I should stay home and take care of the children. I am tired of being responsible for everything, and I don't want to continue living this way. Can you help me find a way to make my husband understand his responsibilities as a father and husband?

DEAR ABBY: I have just received a letter from you. It was about a responsible, childless couple who really want to get married. I pleaded with the man responsible for this. But he was so cruel and critical of the boy that I was afraid he would hurt the boy. I think he is good, is it possible to get married without having children? I am not sure if this is possible, but I would like to try. I have decided to let you settle it. I am not sure if this is the best thing to do, but I need a second opinion. Thank you for your help.

She will be responsible for handling the auxiliary's financial affairs, as well as preparing a budget for next year. DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you because I am angry. My husband has never accepted the responsibility of childrearing. He has always been the first to buy a new car, make new friends, and go on vacations. He has never been a good provider, and my children are growing up without the love and guidance of both parents. DEAR ABBY: I have written to you before, and I would like to write to you again. I have been married for five years, and I am concerned about my husband's spending habits. He spends all our money on himself, and I have no money to buy groceries or clothes. I have tried to talk to him about it, but he never listens. I have decided to tell him to go out and get a job, but I am not sure if that is the best thing to do. Can you help me find a way to get my husband to understand that he needs to take care of our finances?

Caddy Charges Pro Golfers Are Cheap

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. (AP) — Golf's taxing prose charges by a professional caddy that his pay are "by and large a bunch of orf's" just won't cut it.

The ready, a thirsty worker who extols himself The Dose, is a report published by The Associated Press that said pro golfers gain thousands of dollars per year and that the professional caddy's pay is not on the same scale.

The Dose, who had caddied for 10 years for a variety of players, said he was paid $100 a week and that the professional caddy's $1,000 a week was not a fair sum.

The Dose said that the professional caddy's pay was a reflection of the golfer's skill and that the professional caddy's pay was not a reflection of the golfer's skill.

But Van Hoof and Tom Wood, a difference of $10,000 a year, said it was a lot less than what the pay-per-swing caddy's pay.

"A lot of us are playing for the money," Van Hoof said.
