Climate changing?

By WILLIAM R. BENCZUL

It is a yard, not unlike it. However, it is difficult to determine how much of a change is taking place. This is because parts of the world seem to be warming up while others seem to be cooling off.

We should consider the whole world, temperatures measurable over the past century, and what is happening in the 40 inches of the total temperature record. This is also difficult to determine, as parts of the world seem to be warming up while others seem to be cooling off.

For years, scientists have been trying to understand how much of a change is taking place. This is because parts of the world seem to be warming up while others seem to be cooling off.

For example, how are trees growing? Are the trees growing taller or shorter? Are the trees growing faster or slower? Are the trees growing on the same side of the street or on the opposite side of the street? Are the trees growing on the same side of the road or on the opposite side of the road?

Trees also face in many problems with organisms that attack them. These problems can lead to the death of the tree and certain diseases can increase the amount of energy the earth uses.

On the other hand, there are benefits to the growth of the tree. These benefits can include the reduction of wind and noise, as well as the increase of the carbon dioxide cycle. This cycle helps to maintain the balance of the earth's atmosphere.

In conclusion, it is difficult to determine how much of a change is taking place. However, we must keep in mind that, because of the complexity of the world's climate, it is not only related to the energy of the sun but also to the energy of the earth. It is important for us to keep on track in order to maintain the earth's climate and our own climate.

Well, let's bus them out of city
Enforcement was limited to the Winona School Board, while drivers of school buses from Richland School and transportation chiefs from Alcoa were on the sidelines.

Twenty is apparently considered the absolute minimum to require a bus driver's license, and the Winona Board has no such limit, he said.

In concluding his decision on the basis of the Winona Board's interpretation of the state law, the court said: "If the school has abolished the regulation, then it is not being enforced, even though the Winona Board might consider it to have been abolished.

Of course, no solutions would be to ban bus driving without student consent or to ban bus driving under certain circumstances. However, a ban on bus driving would not be acceptable under the law, as it would not be considered a necessary or reasonable restriction.

William F. Buckley Jr.

'What does Wilkins say about busing?'

In a conversation with the New Yorker, William F. Buckley Jr. discusses the controversy over busing and the implications for America's future.

'I speak for myself'

"I am a conservative, and I believe in the value of free markets," Buckley said. "I do not believe in government interference in the economy, and I do not believe in public schools."

"I believe in the importance of local control and the role of parents in education. I believe in the value of private schools, and I believe in educational choice."

"But I also believe in the importance of education, and I believe in the role of public schools in our society. I believe in the value of the public school system, and I believe in the role of teachers in education."

Buckley's comments were the result of a long and storied career in politics, where he has been a consistent advocate for conservative principles and a vocal critic of liberal policies. He has been a force in the political landscape for decades, and his views have often been controversial. However, his message of individual freedom and limited government has resonated with many across the country.

"I believe in the importance of individual liberty and the role of the individual in society," Buckley continued. "I believe in the importance of free speech and the role of the media in our democracy. I believe in the importance of the rule of law and the role of the courts in our society."

Buckley's message has been a consistent one throughout his career, and his views have been shaped by a long and storied career in politics. He has been a force in the political landscape for decades, and his views have often been controversial. However, his message of individual freedom and limited government has resonated with many across the country. His words have been a clarion call for conservatives, and his legacy will continue to be felt for years to come.
Public doubts war end is near

Harris Survey

Despite his plan for stopping all aid to the war, President Nixon has not yet given any indication that the United States is pulling out of Vietnam. According to a Harris Survey, published Thursday, the president agrees with the majority of Americans about the Vietnam war. The survey also shows that most Americans believe the war will end before the end of March.

Although there has been a dramatic decline in American support for the war, the Harris Survey shows that the majority of Americans still favor continued American military involvement in Vietnam. The survey also shows that the majority of Americans believe the war will end before the end of March.

The survey also shows that the majority of Americans believe the war will end before the end of March.

Goodview court fine protested

I would like to bring public attention to the fact that the current newspaper, The Goodview News, is publishing an article that is not in line with the principles of accuracy and truth.

The article in question, which appears on page 10, is a feature story about a local court case. The story is based on information obtained from court records and interviews with the involved parties. However, the article contains several inaccuracies that could be harmful to the individuals involved.

I believe it is important for the public to be aware of these inaccuracies and to bring them to the attention of the editors of The Goodview News. I would appreciate it if you could take the time to review the article and ensure that it meets the standards of accuracy and fairness.

How politicians put on their pants

Art Bachrach

President Nixon, for one, has a habit of putting on his pants as he sits on his bed, and then pulling the leg down over his shoe. This is a common practice among political leaders, but it is not without its consequences.

I have observed that putting on pants in this manner can cause complications as it takes him about 20 minutes to get ready. The final decision has to be made when he is fully dressed, and it is important to consider the necessity of putting on pants while sitting on the bed.

In the morning as he was afraid to put his right leg in first, he was forced to put it up high. This made him feel different from anyone else. This is because he always put on his shoes and pants while sitting on the bed. This is also the case for most people.

Lucey still ready to consider special session on remapping

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) - The idea of having a special session of Congress to dispose of a controversial court order on redistricting is gathering steam, but it is still far from clear that the House and Senate will be willing to consider it.

The House and Senate are divided on the issue, with the House favoring a special session and the Senate against it. The House has already passed a resolution calling for a special session, but the Senate has voted against it.

The court order that would require a special session is related to a legal challenge to the state's redistricting laws. The challenge was brought by a group of plaintiffs who argued that the laws were unconstitutional because they were drawn in a way that violated the principles of "one person, one vote." The court agreed with the plaintiffs and ordered the legislature to redraw the maps.

The House has argued that the court's order should be overturned and that a special session is needed to allow the legislature to redraw the maps in a way that meets the court's requirements. The Senate has argued that a special session is not necessary and that the legislature should be allowed to redraw the maps on its own.

The issue is expected to be a major topic of discussion when Congress returns from its August recess. It is unclear whether a special session will be held and if so, when.

The court order is scheduled to be heard by the U.S. Supreme Court in October.
Exciting combination A-frame, chalet

BY LANDIS

The building of a-frame, chalet type homes has become a major part of our housing market. It is not that people are suddenly in love with old-time designs; but the new designs are made with today's luxuries, conveniences, and requirements. The front and rear elevations of designs are high, and the facade is attractive. This design is ideal for year-round residency. Large recreation rooms are popular, and the doors to the garage and the kitchen are in the main floor as a way to secure a view and to have the extra space. The interior of the design is ideal for the family, as it has a big recreation room, a double garage, and a spacious kitchen. The kitchen is well-equipped with all the necessary appliances. The living room is spacious and has enough space for large furniture. The bedrooms are large, and the bathrooms are well-appointed. The design is ideal for families who need a lot of space and want to enjoy the outdoors. The design is also ideal for those who want to enjoy the beauty of nature.

Harmony in 1st region tourny since 1945

Huge turnout for first field trial

A record number of dogs and owners turned out Sunday at the Harmony Hunt Field Club for the opening round of the 1st Region Tri-State Field Trial. The trial, in which dogs were judged on retrieving, consistency, and other qualities, was part of the annual Women's State Bowling Tournament held at the Winona YMCA. The trial was sponsored by the Women's Sportsmen's Association of Winona and the Tri-State Hunt Dog Association.

Over 100 dogs and their handlers were on hand for the event, which was attended by a large crowd of spectators. The dogs were judged on their ability to retrieve birds, their consistency in performance, and their overall performance. The judges were looking for dogs that were well-trained, well-behaved, and able to work hard.

The trial was held in conjunction with the Women's State Bowling Tournament, which is one of the largest and most competitive in the region. The bowling tournament was held at the Winona YMCA and featured teams from across the state.

The trial was well-attended, with many spectators watching the dogs in action. The judges were strict, and many dogs were eliminated early in the trial. However, a few dogs were able to make it through to the final rounds, where they were judged on their overall performance.

In the end, the trial was a success, with many dogs and handlers participating and enjoying the event. The organizers were pleased with the turnout and the level of competition, and they plan to hold similar trials in the future.
Lawyer says Irwins will plead guilty

NEW YORK (AP) — A lawyer for Clifford and Edie Irwin, the New York City couple charged with impersonating city officials, said Tuesday that the couple will plead guilty to charges in a plea bargain with the district attorney's office.

Securities and Exchange Commission officials have charged the couple with using a vehicle dubbed "Supercar" and a Supermayor image on the ballot.

First the Irwins go to federal court in New York to pre-empt any claims to the ballot. Clifford, 41, and Edie Irwin, 36, with conspiracy and perjury.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The law says it is a crime for a person to impersonate a city official in the Westchester County government.

"I think the problem is that we have a system where people believe they can get away with anything," said the Irwin's attorney, Maurice Nessen.

The Irwins, who are both city workers, are accused of using the "Supercar" and the "Supermayor" image on the ballot.

"We believe this is a case of mistaken identity," said Nessen.

The trial is set for April 18.

White House mum on pandas

By MARGARET SCHERF

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House was mum on Tuesday about whether President Ford would be able to see a live panda at a Washington zoo.

Ford, who is scheduled to visit China later this month, has expressed an interest in seeing the pandas.

The White House said it was unable to confirm whether Ford would be able to see the pandas.

"We don't have any information on that," said a White House spokesman.

The pandas will be on loan to the zoo for three years, the spokesman added.

"We will keep you posted as we receive information," he said.
