Summarized plan to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon on Thursday asked Congress to halt forced busing to improve educational opportunities in America and to upgrade schools.

"First, I shall propose legislation that would call an immediate halt to all new busing orders by federal courts—a moratorium on new busing," the President said. "This would focus our efforts where they really belong — on better education for all of our children rather than on more busing ... on advances that have been made in ending school segregation, or undermine the continuing drive for equal rights."

The President cited Democratic and Republican leaders of the Senate and House of Representatives, and White House aides ar-

McGovern on Nixon plan: 'Total surrender to Wallacism'

BY MICHAEL K. ROBINSON

URBANA, Ill. (AP) - Democratic Sen. Edmund S. Muskie in Wisconsin's critical spring primary and partly in Minnesota's Easter Sunday contest Saturday. The Democrats' leaders in both states are closely watching the results.

"The president's hand is definitely on the ballot box," said Sen. Muskie, in an interview in front of a large crowd of registered voters Wednesday night in Alton and Thursday at a Milwaukee news conference prior to the Wisconsin primary. "And our only hope is to deal his hand," he continued.

"I don't expect that the president will be running under the campaign label "Humphrey-Muskie," he said. "I expect a primary campaign to be started." Muskie said he was "already talking to" Wisconsin audiences the Nixon victory scored on populist campaigners, insisted the issue of primaries to the status of a Humphrey-Muskie ticket, stressed President Nixon shut out the 1968 New York victory because of his "total surrender to Wallaceism."

"He further called for "an attack on the Constitution of the United States" and asked the committee for an opinion on the question of constitutional amendments."

In his prepared statement, Nixon said, "The real problems of this country are not solved by running on the Constitution of the United States."

"The real problem of this country is solved by law enforcement authorities," he said. "That is what we're going to do."

"It is in the media's tradition to cover every election in a grand fashion," said President Nixon. "That is their prerogative."

City, school officials discuss bus parking

Possible solutions to the problem of school buses parking in front of West Broadway are being considered. School parking is currently in front of the West Broadway Hotel, but the Broadway Avenue School is across the street. The school parking is in front of the West Broadway Hotel.

For the first time in 1969, the Winona City Council discussed the possibility of having school buses parked in front of the Broadway Avenue School. The council's concern was that the parking in front of the Broadway Avenue School was causing traffic problems and that the school was too close to the hotel.

Report newsmen, government ignoring antisecrecy law

BY CARL C. CRAFT at WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed changes in the Freedom of Information Act, and the Bush administration has ignored it.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new administration has ignored the Freedom of Information Act, according to a report by the National Press Club.

Former New York Times executive editor Louis A. Stein has been appointed as the new head of the Freedom of Information Act.

The report, based on interviews with former and current members of the administration, said the Bush administration has failed to respond to a Freedom of Information Act request from the National Press Club, which was seeking documents on the administration's policies.

The administration has not responded to the Freedom of Information Act request since the club submitted it in July.

The administration's failure to respond has raised questions about its commitment to transparency and openness.

The Freedom of Information Act, enacted in 1966, is intended to provide the public with access to government records and information.

The act requires federal agencies to release information unless it falls into one of nine categories of information that are exempt from disclosure.

The categories include national security, law enforcement, and public safety.

The Bush administration has taken a strong stance against the release of information, saying that it is necessary to protect national security and other interests.

The report also cites instances where the administration has denied requests for information on matters such as the war on terrorism, the Iraq War, and the 9/11 attacks.

The National Press Club has called on the administration to respond to its Freedom of Information Act request and has urged the public to pressure the administration to release more information.

The administration has not responded to the request, and it remains unclear when or if it will provide the requested information.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rule on Stout U. student voters may have wide impact.

The Supreme Court ruled today that college students are citizens and have the right to vote in local elections.

The case, which involved a question of whether college students are citizens for the purposes of voting in local elections, was brought by a group of students at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

The students argued that they are citizens and should be allowed to vote in local elections, even if they are not registered to vote in their home states.

The court ruled in favor of the students, holding that they are citizens and have the right to vote in local elections.

The decision is seen as a significant victory for the students and for the cause of voting rights.

It is likely that the decision will have wide implications for college students and for the rights of non-citizens to vote in local elections.

The ruling has the potential to impact elections at the local, state, and national levels.

President offers Democrats chance to escape Wallace

Richard Nixon last night offered the influence of his vice presidential candidate, the Democrat party from sectional fragmentation.

The offer comes on the heels of the Florida primary in which Senator Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, a Democrat, won the state's primary. His victory is a major blow to the Democratic party, which is already facing an uphill battle in the general election.

However, the offer was met with mixed reactions from the Democratic party. Some saw it as a way to unite the party behind a single candidate, while others were concerned about the potential for divisiveness and the impact on the party's chances in the general election.

The offer could also have implications for the upcoming Wisconsin primary, which is scheduled for April 4. Wisconsin is a key state in the Democratic primary calendar, and its outcome could determine the viability of Kennedy as the party's nominee.

Kennedy, who has been criticized for his lack of experience and the lack of a clear policy agenda, may see the offer as a way to gain support from Nixon's backers and to strengthen his position in the Democratic race.

The offer also brings to mind the 1960 Democratic convention, which also featured a divided party and a candidate who was not well-respected within the party. In that case, the party eventually nominated John F. Kennedy, who went on to win the presidency.

With a divided party and a challenging electoral landscape, the offer could be seen as a way to unite the Democratic party behind a single candidate, much like the Kennedy candidacy of 1960.

There are some who argue that the offer is a way to buy off Nixon's supporters and to secure the party's nomination. Others see it as a way to gain momentum and to move the party forward in the face of a challenging electoral environment.

The offer is a complex one, and its impact on the Democratic party and the upcoming primaries remains to be seen. It is likely to be a topic of discussion in the coming days and weeks as the Democratic party continues to navigate the electoral landscape.

Japan: one big gap in summary

C. L. Salzburger

Japan is facing a major challenge in the form of a large budget deficit. The government is spending more than it is taking in, which is leading to a growing national debt. This situation is further complicated by the fact that Japan's economy is slowing down, which is making it difficult to raise taxes to finance government spending.

In order to address this problem, Japan will need to implement a series of economic reforms. These reforms could include:

- Increasing taxes
- Cutting government spending
- Encouraging private investment

It is important for Japan to take action to address this challenge, as failing to do so could lead to a loss of confidence in the economy and could have negative implications for the country's future.

Students demonstrate over firing of English teacher

FLOORDWOOD, Miss. (AP) — The firing of a young English teacher caused by a dispute over a "sit-in" demonstration at his high school has led to protests and a walkout by black students.

The student who organized the sit-in, a junior named John Haddock, was fired last week after he and other students were arrested during a protest against the firing.

The school board said it had no choice but to fire Haddock because he had led the protest, which it said was a "violation of school rules." The students said they were simply exercising their First Amendment rights.

The school board also said it had received complaints from parents and community members about the protest, including reports of vandalism and disorder.

Lawrence is set to address the issue at a meeting on Monday night.

Nixon proposes bundle of business incentives

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon proposed a package of incentives for business and industry to encourage them to move factories and jobs to the nation's urban centers.

The plan, which includes tax breaks and other financial assistance, is aimed at reversing the trend of urban decline and improving the economy in inner-city areas.

Nixon said the plan would be a key part of his administration's efforts to combat poverty and crime. He encouraged Congress to pass the legislation as soon as possible.

In the 23rd Psalm, David expresses his confidence in God as a provider. He assures us that God will not let us go wanting, that He will supply all our needs.

But the Psalmist does not stop there. He assures us that God will give us more than we need, in fact, so much more that our cup will run over. He ensures us a surplus. A God-given surplus. If we waste it, we are careless. If we share it, of course, we car. To waste it would be to mock the provider; to share it would be to thank Him for it.

In an era when we hear so much about the minimum hourly wage and a guaranteed income, we find it very difficult to separate that which we need from what we do not need, but think we do. If we could honestly discern between necessities and luxuries, we could witness our cup really running over. The question is personal. What are you doing with your surplus? Just what are you doing with Your Cup Full?
Thoughts of a clergymen.

Quaker philosopher sees good, bad in Jesus movement

By GEORGE W. COWAN

A Quaker philosopher sees good, bad in the Jesus movement. The Quaker philosopher, who has studied the movement extensively, says that the Jesus movement has brought many new insights and perspectives to the world, but it has also brought a new set of challenges and problems. The philosopher says that the Jesus movement has brought a new sense of spirituality and a new sense of community, but it has also brought a new set of conflicts and divisions. The philosopher says that the Jesus movement is a complex phenomenon and that it is difficult to make a simple judgment about it.

Uncertainties of trade mission

The uncertainties of trade mission are discussed in the following article. The article highlights the challenges that traders face when trying to establish trade relationships in foreign countries. The article points out that traders must be prepared to adapt to the local culture and to be flexible in their approach. The article also notes that traders must be prepared to take risks and to be patient in their efforts.
