Nixon says in message —
Troops to leave, bombs to fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon plans to leave South Vietnam in July — and to keep on bombing North Vietnam and sending in more South Vietnamese — according to the contents of a letter written to his top military advisers today. "I feel that you will find in the attached message that I have been forced to make a decision that I do not wish to make," the letter declares.

The letter, a copy of which has been obtained by The Associated Press, indicates that Nixon is planning a "full-scale" military operation in the south, in addition to the bombing already in progress. The letter states that the operation will involve the use of "tanks, artillery, and air power." The operation will be directed against "the enemy's strongpoints and command posts," the letter says.

The letter also states that Nixon is "convinced" that the operation will "end the war in South Vietnam." The letter adds that Nixon is "determined" to "win the war in South Vietnam" and "to win it quickly." The letter concludes with the words "I strongly urge you to carry out this decision."

At the International Space Station, the astronauts held a news conference Wednesday to brief the media on their return journey. The team discussed their experiences in space, the latest scientific findings, and their plans for future missions. The conference was held in a spacious area, equipped with state-of-the-art technology to facilitate communication with Earth.

Young: saw enough for 10 lifetimes. "This mission was one of the most challenging and rewarding experiences of my career," said Young. "We encountered some difficulties along the way, but we did not let them discourage us. Our team worked together to overcome these challenges and emerge victorious.

Honeywell shareholders defeat bids to stop weapons production

By John LUCENIGER
Honeywell shareholders defeated bids to stop weapons production on Thursday. The vote was held at the company's annual meeting held in Minneapolis.

The protest, sponsored by the Catholic Peace Fellowship, was zeroed in on the company's involvement with the defense industry. The group argued that Honeywell's participation in military contracts conflicted with the company's mission statement and its values.

Honeywell's CEO, Mark Jordan, defended the company's position, arguing that defense contracts were essential for the company's financial stability and growth. He also emphasized the role of defense contracts in providing jobs and opportunities for employees.

The vote was held on the floor of the Minneapolis Convention Center, with thousands of shareholders in attendance. The vote was close, with 49% of shareholders in favor of the proposal to stop weapons production.

Protest plight of Soviet Jews

ST. PAUL, Minn. — A group of Soviet Jews held a protest outside the U.S. Embassy in Washington D.C. on Thursday, demanding the release of their fellow countrymen from Soviet prisons.

The protestors, members of the Soviet Jewish community in Minnesota, gathered outside the embassy to draw attention to the plight of their fellow Jews who were being held in Soviet prisons. They carried signs and chanted slogans to express their solidarity with the Soviet Jewish community.

The protest was organized by the Minnesota Jewish Community, in conjunction with the Soviet Jewish community in Washington D.C. The group was represented by several prominent members of the Soviet Jewish community, who addressed the rally.

The protest received widespread coverage in the media, with news outlets around the world reporting on the event. The group was encouraged by the response they received, and they planned to continue their efforts to draw attention to the plight of Soviet Jews.

Shorelands Act regulations need attention

There's little doubt that new state Shorelands Act regulations, as copied from the Virginia Shorelands Act, are going to cost a lot of money, with new laws that are difficult to interpret and to enforce. There's also little doubt that the law has, in the words of one observer, "put the state in the awkward position of having to serve and protect the natural resources of the state and at the same time trying to meet the needs of the state's economic development." There's little doubt, however, that new state Shorelands Act regulations are needed, now that we're living in a world where economic development is not only necessary but also more difficult to achieve.

CORPORATIONS AS USEFUL CITIZENS

In 1912, a state senator from Ohio, Frank J. Bahr, said that corporations were "useful citizens," the same citizens who could help to build a better community. He believed that corporations could do more than just make money; they could also do good. He said that corporations should be "useful citizens," and he believed that they were. Today, however, the idea of corporations as "useful citizens" is not as widely held. In fact, some people believe that corporations are more interested in profits than in serving the community.

Power braking is real advantage

The readers of the Daily News in the Warm Springs area are advised to take notice of the following.

The power braking system has been installed in all the vehicles operated by the Warm Springs-Nutter Store. This system is designed to provide a safe and convenient braking system for all vehicles.

The system consists of a hydraulic brake booster, which is activated by the pressure against the brake pedal. This booster increases the braking force applied to the brake shoes, providing a more effective braking action.

In addition, the power braking system has been designed with a self-adjusting feature, which allows the brake shoes to maintain their correct position, even after extended use.

This system has been installed to ensure the safety and comfort of our customers. We believe that this feature will make a significant contribution to the overall performance of our vehicles.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Anderson may ask restoration of hospital positions

WISCONSIN, June 15 — Gov. Patrick J. Lucey Wednesday called a meeting of hospital administrators to discuss the state's hospitalization policies and to seek insight into the administration's plans to improve services.

Lucey is expected to announce his plans to improve the state's mental health system at a press conference today. He has been told that the state's mental health system is "disaster" and that further cuts in services will be needed to make it work.

The meeting was called in response to a survey conducted by the state's mental health system. The survey showed that the state's mental health system is in need of improvement and that further cuts in services will be needed to make it work.

In a statement, Lucey said, "We have a duty to the people of this state to ensure that our mental health system is adequate to meet the needs of those who require its services. We must also be mindful of the financial constraints that we face in this time of economic uncertainty."

Lucey added, "I have spoken with many of the leaders in the mental health system, and I have been impressed with their commitment to providing quality care to those who need it. I believe that we can work together to improve the system and make it more effective."
Muskie gives up campaign but says he hasn't given up hope

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edmund Muskie, who last week said his presidential ambitions were at an end, announced today he will stay in the race for the Democratic nomination.

"I am giving up my candidacy," Muskie said. "But I am not giving up my hope."

The former Massachusetts senator had been considered a major contender in the primary-race, but his chances of winning were seen as slim. Muskie announced his decision following a series of primary losses.

"I am not giving up my hope," he said. "I am still giving my campaign."

Wisconsin government employees take to air to lighten work load

By NANCY R. BEGALKE
MADISON, Wis. (AP) — The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources said Tuesday that a new checking account or add tremendous benefits to a new banking service so important, it's hard to pass up. We call it Complete Customer Checking, and we're among the first to offer it... anywhere. Because we care, we offer more and CCC is just a part of more. For a better lawn use CS. 'Air force' grows to 79 aircraft

The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources announced that it had acquired an additional aircraft for use in aerial surveys and monitoring activities. The aircraft, a small, fixed-wing aircraft, will be used for aerial surveys of natural resources, including wildlife, vegetation, and water quality. The department also noted that it had increased its use of aerial surveys in recent years to help track changes in natural resources. The new aircraft will be used for monitoring activities, including the detection of changes in vegetation cover, water quality, and wildlife populations.

Red takeover — Disagreement on improvement need in Saigon forces

Given these challenges, it is necessary to consider the possibility of improving the situation in Saigon forces. While the Vietnamese forces have made progress in recent months, they still face significant challenges, including the need for better training and equipment. One suggestion is to increase the support provided to the Vietnamese forces, including by providing additional training and equipment. This could be achieved through increased aid from the United States and other allies, as well as through increased cooperation between the Vietnamese forces and international partners.

Troops to leave — McGovern: Nixon is trying to save face

Sen. George McGovern, a Democratic presidential candidate, said that President Nixon's announcement that he would withdraw U.S. forces from Vietnam was a sign that the president was trying to save face. McGovern said that the announcement was a clear sign of the administration's growing frustration with the war in Vietnam. He said that the administration was trying to save face by announcing a troop withdrawal, even though no real progress had been made in the peace negotiations.

Fritz Wolf, administrator of the Division of Natural Resources, said that the decision to withdraw U.S. forces from Vietnam was a sign of the administration's growing belief that the war was not worth fighting. He said that the withdrawal was a sign of the administration's growing belief that the war was not worth fighting, and that the withdrawal was a sign of the administration's growing belief that the war was not worth fighting.

The National Park Service oversees 110 parks and monuments, including some of the most popular destinations in the United States. The service is responsible for protecting and preserving these natural and cultural resources for future generations. The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources owns the largest forest in the world, covering over 10 million acres. The department is responsible for managing and protecting this forest, as well as for providing recreational opportunities for visitors.

The threeAGEMENT programs were designed to save Nixon's image by providing a veneer of action. With the election less than three months away, Nixon was under increasing pressure to take decisive action. The department's announcement was a way for Nixon to try to show that he was taking action against the Viet Cong.

Prince of the Tidal Basin

WINONA, Minn. — An American Institute of Architects, the American Institute of Planning, the American Institute of Architects, and the American Institute of Architects, organized a program to honor the late architect, Edward J. Woodcock, Jr., for his distinguished service to the profession. The program was held at the American Institute of Architects' headquarters in Washington, D.C., on March 26, 1973.

The event was attended by many distinguished architects, planners, and historians, and was chaired by the late architect, who was not only a prominent figure in the field of architecture, but also a respected member of the American Institute of Architects. The program featured a special address by the late architect, who spoke about his career, his achievements, and his contributions to the field of architecture.

Woodcock was a graduate of the University of Minnesota, and began his career as an architect in the late 1940s. He worked for several prestigious firms, including the firm of Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, and was a founding partner of the architectural firm of Woodcock, Davis, and Associates.

In 1969, Woodcock was named the first director of the American Institute of Architects, and held that position until his death in 1972. During his tenure as director, Woodcock worked tirelessly to promote the profession of architecture and to advance the interests of architects and their clients.

Woodcock was a dedicated and committed member of the American Institute of Architects, and his contributions to the profession were recognized with numerous awards and honors. He was a past president of the American Institute of Architects, and was a member of the American Institute of Architects' Honor Council.

Woodcock was a leader in the field of architecture, and his legacy continues to inspire and influence architects and planners around the world. His contributions to the profession will be remembered and celebrated for generations to come.

Plainview herd tops in DHIA test

Plainview, Minn. — Dairy farmer Donald Klein and his Wabasha County Dairy Herd have topped all others in the state for the second year in a row, according to Dr. John Belcher, dairy extension specialist in Minnesota. Klein said the herd, which is registered in the Wabasha County Dairy Herd Association, is owned by Lawrence Sexton and Schuth Bros.

Plainview's herd of 99 cows produced 1,243,445 pounds of milk in the month of March, compared to 1,230,500 pounds for the second-place herds in the state, Millville and Zumbro Falls. Plainview ranked third with 1,229,200 pounds of milk produced.

The DHIA (Dairy Herd Improvement Association) test is a national program designed to evaluate the merit of dairy herds. It involves the testing of individual cows and the analysis of the herd's production and health records.

Klein said the herd's success is due to good management practices, including proper nutrition, health care, and efficient milking procedures. He added that the herd also benefits from the use of DHIA records to make informed decisions about breeding and genetics.

Farmers from other counties have approached Klein for advice on improving their herds, and he has been eager to share his knowledge and experiences with them.

The Klein herd's success is a testament to the importance of genetic improvement and management practices in improving dairy production. Klein's commitment to continuous improvement and the willingness to share knowledge with others will undoubtedly contribute to the continued success of the Wabasha County Dairy Herd Association.
Nitrogen fertilizer OK when properly applied

Several types of fertilizer are available to provide nitrogen for the plants to grow and develop. Proper planning or wrong application could result in injury to the crop. Farmers should select the type of fertilizer that best fits the crop and management conditions, and pretreatment does not guarantee proper placement or wrong application.

Application has shown that injury below soil surface may occur with application too deep. Proper placement is imperative. Farmers should check with their county extension agents or a nearby university extension service.

Application rates also were very variable. In the 1971-72 school year, according to Elmer Simon, Altura, the wool incentive payments were figured at 102.8 percent of the average price paid for wool.

Several thousand dollars worth of wool incentive payments were made in the 1972 school year by the Minnesota Wool Producers Cooperative, according to Elmer Simon, Altura. The payments were based on the average price paid for wool.

GRANDINA, Minn. — The law is set to provide for enhanced crop insurance in the United States for 1973. The statute representing the result of a long period of debate begins April 1, and will become effective for the 1973 crop.

The law, according to Wm. R. W. Goodwin, manager of the Soil Conservation and Reclassification Program, will provide for increased protection of landowners, and the law will also provide for increased protection of landowners.

A key point of the law is that the law is set to provide for the protection of landowners, and the law will also provide for increased protection of landowners.

The law is set to provide for the protection of landowners, and the law will also provide for increased protection of landowners.

For all crops, the law sets up a special committee to study the effects of the new laws and regulations. The committee will be composed of experts in the field of crop insurance, and it will be charged with making recommendations to the secretary of agriculture.

For more information, contact the Soil Conservation and Reclassification Program, 200 Main St., St. Paul, Minn.
