West Germans press search for bombers

By JOHN REIDY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. military said today it is preparing search teams and equipment to assist the West Germans in their hunt for the deserting East German fighter pilot who flew to his own. Police in Berlin, who are searching for the bomber, believe that he may still be in the United States.

Police said that they have reason to believe that the bomber may have arrived in the United States on a commercial flight. They have also approached the U.S. military about the possibility of sending search teams to the United States to assist in the search.

The bomber, identified as Master Sergeant Koval, fled from the East German military base at Leipzig on November 9, 1989, and has not been heard from since.

Police believe that the bomber is likely to be in the United States, either in California or New York, and have asked the U.S. military to investigate.

South Vietns repel attack on Kontum

By JOHN REIDY

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Vietns authorities said today that they have repelled an attack on Kontum, a city in the central highlands.

The attack was said to have been carried out by a group of Vietns separatists, who are believed to be backed by the U.S. government.

South Vietns troops said that they had repelled the attack and that the separatists were forced to retreat.

North Vietns launched a new offensive today, said a spokesman for the Vietns military.

The spokesman said that the Vietns troops had penetrated deep into the South Vietns border area and had taken control of several villages.

The attack on Kontum came as the Vietns government announced that it had killed five women and a child in a hamlet near the border.

South Vietns leaders said that they were determined to drive the Vietns separatists out of the country.

Angela Davis defense rests in stirs little attention in state

By GERRY NELSON

The fact that Minnesota's Hubert Humphrey has been the odds-on choice in the Senate race for the past year hasn't seemed to stir much excitement in Minnesota. Humphrey has been a national political figure, well-known for his strong appearance at the Democratic National Convention in 1968 and his role in the peace movement. But his campaign has been relatively low-key, with little attention paid to the issues.

Humphrey's campaign has focused on his experiences as a senator, his dedication to the cause of peace, and his support for civil rights and social justice. He has sought to distance himself from the more radical elements of the peace movement, while still appealing to younger voters who are disillusioned with the war in Vietnam.

The election is highly contestable, with Humphrey facing a strong challenge from Sen. George McGovern, who has built a strong grassroots organization and is popular with the Hispanic and Native American communities in Minnesota. The race is expected to be close, with Humphrey holding a slight lead in most polls.

Despite the lack of public attention, Humphrey has been working hard to build support in the state. He has made several appearances in the Twin Cities and has held several town hall meetings to listen to the concerns of Minnesota voters.

Polls suggest that Humphrey has a strong lead in the state, with McGovern trailing by a significant margin. The race is expected to be decided on Election Day, with Humphrey favored to win.

Report Brumper followed Nixon

TORONTO (AP) — The last week of the presidential campaign was followed by the early hours of the 1972 campaign, with the return of Arthur Bremer, the man who assassinated President Nixon

The newspapers quoted a former member of the Bremer family who said that Bremer was in El Paso when the shooting took place on April 15.

The family had been in Mexico, where they had hoped to avoid the attention of the press. The family was not aware of the shooting until they read about it in the newspapers.

Bremer, who had been living in Mexico for several years, was arrested at the border on April 17. He is expected to be charged with murder.

Bremer's family has not commented on the shooting, but they have expressed their shock and sorrow.

Bremer's defense attorney has claimed that Bremer was acting in self-defense, saying that Bremer believed that Nixon was planning to bomb the Vietnam War. The defense attorney will try to prove that Bremer acted in self-defense.

The prosecution said it will try to prove that Bremer acted out of rage and despair, and that he intended to kill Nixon.

The trial is expected to begin in late November, with both sides mounting vigorous campaigns to win public support for their respective causes.

The need to keep America strong

The draft may be phased out, the troops may be coming home from Vietnam, agreements may be signed with the Viet Cong. But there may be more than men and women to fight McCloskey to keep America strong. It is a question of basic military posture, and the public must be fully informed of the need to continue a policy of deterrence.

Our day's call

The American Conservative Union chaplains the Senate adjourned with a sentiment that the nation's defense is still in a precarious state, and calls on the President to boost defense spending now. In fact, if the Senate's fiscal concern is any indication, defense spending should be increased. The fiscal state of the U.S. is far better than it has been in years. If the country is to continue to be a deciding world power — with America to lead the way in the demands of national security to a nuclear age.

That's why the Institute for American Strategy has produced a film, "Only the Strong," in which it justifies the value of the McNamara doctrine and the offensive/defensive weapon, a land of about which the President, on the other hand, is at the U.S. at the time of the 1972 Cuban missile crisis. For his part, the President is in favor of the McNamara doctrine.

The view from Hanoi

is strongly impressed by Far Eastern strategy which in the eyes of its advocates, is the only strategy for the preservation of American interests. He believes that American interests in Asia are "vital, and a vital interest is not a temporary interest. We have a long-term interest in Asia, and that interest is vital to our national security."

The OTHER DAY... in Hanoi, Premier Dang, a man who is perhaps even more fervent a believer in the strategy of "only the strong" than his more familiar comrade, the President of the United States, was discussing the situation in the South Pacific, and he said, "We have just one chance to go to war, and that is in Vietnam."

To that end, the government of Vietnam has constructed a large number of defensive positions in the South Pacific, and has a large number of personnel stationed in those positions. These positions are strategically located, and are capable of defending the country against the possibility of an invasion. The Vietnamese government believes that these positions are necessary to protect the country from the threat of invasion. The government of Vietnam is determined to defend its sovereignty and independence, and is prepared to use all means necessary to do so.

was uncertain, but he was not alone in his uncertainty. The President, who is said to be in the cabinet, is also uncertain. The cabinet is in a state of confusion. The President, who is said to be in the cabinet, is also uncertain. The cabinet is in a state of confusion.

WASHINGTON — A New York Times editorial recently expressed the hope that the President would take a stronger line on Vietnam. But the President's line on Vietnam is clear: he is determined to avoid a war in Vietnam. The President's line is based on a belief that a war in Vietnam would be a disaster for the United States. The President is determined to avoid a war in Vietnam.

In fact, if the President's line on Vietnam is any indication, defense spending should be increased. The fiscal state of the U.S. is far better than it has been in years. If the country is to continue to be a deciding world power — with America to lead the way in the demands of national security to a nuclear age.

Judges delay decision on air pollution war.

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal judge has come within a hair's breadth of sealing the air pollution war with a certain outcome, but postponed his decision for the time being.

Wednesday morning, before the Environmental Protection Agency sought a quiet place to meditate, Judge Earl Philip Olson, a board member, came within a hair's breath of sealing the air pollution war with a certain outcome.

The judge declined to order changes in the plan. In effect, the judge said that the plan would be renewed for two years, and that the environmentalists could renew efforts to improve the plan.

The ruling also forbids students from the same school to attend any school other than their own.

The judge said he would consider the proposal to slow down the plan, and that he would not consider the proposal to speed up the plan.

Five women killed in munition plant blast

LUBBOCK, Tex. (AP) - Col. John Hogue of New Orleans, La., said Monday a “children’s farm” for teachers in Vietnam was the scene of a deadly explosion that left five women dead.

Hogue said the plant had “an accident” and added that the children’s farm was destroyed.

The explosion, which occurred in a small building near the factory, killed five teachers and two students, according to Hogue.

Some local residents described the children as “cute little kids,” while others said they were “very nice children.”

A group of children had been playing in the area when the explosion occurred, said Hogue.

He said there was no immediate estimate of damage.

Growing season has advanced but area crops need moisture

The hot weather of the past several days has advanced the growing season in the area considerably. With a 5 to 7 regular rain, many crops are looking good. Farmers and county Extension agents are calling for irrigation for those areas that are not already irrigated.

Precipitation is both Missourian and Minnesota. The report indicates that by the present time it is impossible to do what the need will be.

There is a good amount of corn coming from good material. Weeds are causing problems in many corn and crop fields.

The best we can do is to try to understand the situation and be ready as best we can. The problem is difficult to tell at this time just when the damage will occur.

Some pylons are required and it is expected to continue throughout the growing season. This is the same as the supply of water, which is most serious.

Aster yellows disease serious crop threat

ST. PAUL, Minn.—A few weeks ago, when the first signs of aster yellows disease started to appear in Minnesota, the worst outbreak in 15 years was predicted. The disease is a serious threat to the state's corn crop.

The disease is caused by the aster yellows virus, which is spread by a virus-carrying potato aphid. The disease was first discovered in the state in 1957, and since then it has spread to other parts of the country.

The disease is most serious because it affects the growth of the plant, reducing the yield of corn. It also affects other crops, such as tomatoes, peppers, and beans.

In a recent study, scientists found that the disease reduces the yield of corn by 30%. This means that farmers who have the disease in their fields will have to plant more corn to make up for the loss.

The disease is spread by the potato aphid, which is attracted to the corn field. The aphids feed on the plants and spread the virus to other plants.

To prevent the disease, farmers can use insecticides to control the aphids. They can also plant resistant varieties of corn, or use cultural practices to reduce the population of aphids.

The disease is a serious threat to the state's economy, and farmers are encouraged to take steps to prevent its spread.

Neighbours help injured farmer

LAKEWOOD, Minn. — Neighbors and friends of the Lakewood Farmers' Guild have been working to repair the damage caused by a tractor explosion on the farm.

On Thursday afternoon, a tractor exploded on the farm, causing a fire that destroyed the barn and killed one of the farmers. The other farmer was injured in the explosion.

The explosion occurred while the farmers were working on the farm. The cause of the explosion is under investigation.

The farmers are being offered support and assistance by the local community. A fund has been set up to help with the repair of the farm and other expenses.

The community is also holding a fundraiser to support the farmers and their families. The event will be held on Saturday evening, and all proceeds will go to the farmers.

Feed grain producers see more rivalry

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Feed grain producers are seeing more rivalry in the market as the demand for feed grains increases.

The demand for feed grains is increasing due to the increase in the number of livestock in the country. This is leading to more competition among feed grain producers, as they try to secure the necessary resources to meet the demand.

Feed grain producers are also facing competition from other sources of feed, such as corn and soybeans. This is leading to more innovation in the feed grain industry, as producers try to develop new products to meet the needs of their customers.

The increase in demand is also leading to higher prices for feed grains. This is putting pressure on feed grain producers, who are trying to keep their costs down.

Cut alfalfa early for best feeding

WATERTOWN, S.D. — Cutting alfalfa early in the season can help improve the feeding value of the crop.

Alfalfa is a valuable feed source for livestock, and cutting it early can improve its feeding value. This is because the feeding value of alfalfa decreases as it matures.

Cutting alfalfa early also helps to prevent the crop from becoming too dry, which can reduce its feeding value. Cutting it early also helps to ensure that the crop is at its peak feeding value when it is fed to livestock.

The feeding value of alfalfa can be improved by cutting it early in the morning, when the crop is at its peak feeding value. This is because the crop is more likely to be at its peak feeding value when it is harvested early in the morning.

The survey will be conducted on a voluntary basis, and farmers are encouraged to participate. The results of the survey will be available to the public.
