No word on arms package

Kissinger says 'progress good'

By RONALD SCHEVIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is asking Congress for a new defense arms package.

The price tag for the new arms package isn't known, but the defense chief of staff said it would amount to more than $12 billion. The Senate is expected to act on the measure in the coming week.

Nixon said he was seeking the new package because of a "continuing arms buildup." He didn't provide details on what kind of weapons or equipment would be included.

The request comes amid growing concern in Washington about the military balance of power between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The president made his request in a meeting with congressional leaders earlier this week. He is expected to address the issue again next week when he meets with Senate and House members.

The new arms package is seen as part of Nixon's efforts to build up U.S. military strength in response to what he perceives as an increasing threat from the Soviet Union.

Nixon told reporters that the new request is "not a response to any specific action by the Soviet Union," but rather a broader strategy to enhance U.S. defense capabilities.

The president said he had already discussed the matter with key congressional leaders and that they had been "extremely receptive." He added that he hoped to have a final decision on the package in two or three weeks.

The new arms package is expected to include new fighter aircraft, missile systems, and possibly even new naval vessels.

Nixon made his announcement during a visit to the Pentagon, where he met with top military leaders. He later told reporters that he was pleased with the progress being made in developing the new weapons systems.

The president also defended his administration's record on arms control, saying that it had made significant progress in reducing nuclear arsenals through negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Nixon said he was committed to maintaining a strong military presence in the world, but he noted that the United States could not afford to "broadly expand our military forces at this time." He added that he was working to ensure that the nation's defense posture was "adequate but not excessive."
Johnson, Wilkie race almost a referendum on ethics

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Paul Johnson, a surprisingly strong challenger in the three-man primary election campaign for the Republican Senate nomination, has announced that he will not respond to a recent advertisement by his rival, incumbent Sen. John Stennis: Johnson's decision to ignore the ad, which accused him of being a "bureaucrat," comes as his campaign continues to gain momentum.

Stennis, widely regarded as the likely nominee, has not yet officially entered the race, but has been referred to as a "bureaucrat," although he has denied the accusation.

Johnson's campaign has capitalized on the negative image associated with the term "bureaucrat," suggesting that it is a label applied to those who are out of touch with the concerns of ordinary citizens.

"We're not going to respond to this smear campaign," Johnson said in a statement. "This label is a cheap attempt by Stennis to deflect attention away from his record.

"Our campaign is focused on attacking Stennis' record, not engaging in name-calling.

"We're going to continue to highlight our vision for a more inclusive and engaging Senate.

"Our campaign is about the future of Mississippi, not personal attacks on our opponent."

Johnson's campaign has been supported by a number of prominent Mississippians, who have endorsed his bid for the Senate.

Stennis, on the other hand, has enjoyed the support of many of the state's leading politicians, including Governor Haley Barbour.

"Stennis is an experienced and dedicated leader who has served our state well," Barbour said in support of his colleague. "We need to support him in this race.

"Stennis has a proven record of fighting for the people of Mississippi."

"We need to ensure that Stennis remains the face of the Senate for Mississippi."

How do you make a big city work?

A depressing choir each day 2 read to the Chicago Tribune — depression about how the city is broken, how it is divided, how it is losing its way. The city is no longer a place to live, let alone a city to be a part of.

The other night Richard Neil, a Chicago writer, was on WGN to give the personal observations of a 40-year resident of the city. He described Chicago as a “great city that is not a city” — a city that is not a place to live, where the community is not a place to be.

But why is this widespread, deep-seated concern about the city? It is not because the city is broken, but because the city is no longer a place to live, let alone a city to be a part of.

There are several possible causes of this concern, but the most likely is the decline of the city’s economic base. The city has lost its traditional industries, and has not been able to develop new ones to take their place. This has led to a decline in the city’s tax base, which has forced the city to cut back on services and programs.

Another reason for the concern about the city is the rise of crime. The city has a high crime rate, and this has made many people feel unsafe.

The city’s concern is also fueled by the city’s political problems. The city has been plagued by corruption, and this has led to a loss of trust in the city’s government.

In conclusion, the city’s concern is a result of the city’s economic decline, the rise of crime, and the city’s political problems. The city needs to address these issues in order to become a city that is worth living in again.

What is he hiding?

BOSTON — Why has President Nixon reached such an extreme in his attempt to avoid evidence of guilt in the Watergate scandal? It is, said Stone, the pursuit of happiness has been degraded into a moral crusade.

People would worry why he is so sincere in his argument.

But Pinconon and proclamation are nothing but the President’s resistance and the ultimate government in the conduct of those who were in the last, that is to say, in the last love. The last love is the love of the family.

The language the President uses to keep his enemies at bay is the language of his family. The President uses his family to keep his enemies at bay. The President uses his family to keep his enemies at bay.

And the family, in the end, is the family.

This is the family.

Canada, my Canada

WASHINGTON — I went to Canada the other day and was shocked to find that a newspaper here was selling Canadian coins.

"You can still buy those things in the United States," said the seller.

"But not in Canada," I said.

"That's different," said the seller.

"We're selling to the people in the United States," he said. "They want to buy Canadian coins, so we sell them.

"And you think that's the only thing that's different in Canada?" I asked.

The seller laughed. "Oh no, there are many differences. But the fact that you can buy Canadian coins here is one of them."

RODA, DAKOT, Fla. (AP) — When Mary Boos first heard that her furry companions were going to be turned out to pasture, she wasn’t too happy. But she had to agree to the experiment to stay in the business, and she quickly realized that her new four-legged employees were just as capable as human workers.

"They were just as hard-working as any of our human employees," Boos said. "And they didn’t take a day off, even on Sunday."

In her new role, Boos says she doesn’t miss the long hours or the constant stress of running a sausage plant. She now spends her days managing the farm and enjoying the fresh air.

"It’s been a big adjustment," Boos said. "But I’m happy now that I have time to enjoy the outdoors."

Boos is one of a growing number of farmers who are turning to animals as a way to reduce their environmental impact and improve their quality of life.

"I’ve always been interested in sustainable farming," Boos said. "And I think it’s important to do what we can to protect the environment for future generations."

Scientists see Hawaiian leadership

RONSZEU (UPI) — Science was the topic of discussion at a natural energy symposium by President Nixon Friday.

The University of Hawaii faculty members, concerned with the energy crisis, announced that they were working on a variety of natural energy sources.

"We have a lot of potential," said John Jones, director of the Institute of Natural Energy Resources. "We are working on things like wind, ocean, and solar." He added that technology should be directed to provide as much energy as possible through those natural energy sources.

But the festival was not just about technology. The festival featured a variety of other energy sources, including geothermal, solar, and wind.

Market survey indicates meat prices generally higher

BY LUCILE COOK

Honolulu Star-Advertiser, Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government said the meat prices were generally higher in the U.S. than in other countries. The survey covered seven cities this year, and the prices were up in price.

Wholesale prices have been generally higher in the U.S. than in Europe. The government has been promoting the idea of reducing imports by increasing the prices of foreign goods.

In an effort to do this, the government announced Thursday that it was going to raise the prices of all meats, except for pork. The increase was to be 2 cents per pound for all meats, except for pork.

During the week ending April 19, 1974, the government checked the prices of meats in seven cities, including Denver, Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Los Angeles, and Seattle. The increases ranged from 5 cents to 20 cents per pound.

The increase was not expected to affect the retail level, however, since the government has been raising the prices of meats for the past several weeks.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — The U.S. government is not expected to pay a ransom for the missing attaché. The attaché was reported missing last April, but there has been no word of his whereabouts since then.

The attaché was last seen at the airport in Mexico City.

Mariner 10 in productive stage

PARADISE, CPE. (UPI) — Mariner 10 entered its productive phase today, sending to Earth three photographs which were expected to indicate the latitude plane where the spacecraft was located. The shots were the first to be transmitted from the 2.5 million-mile spacecraft, and are reflections of elevations and topography.

For the first time ever, the spacecraft was beaming back to Earth more than 8.4 million miles of Mercury, hidden from Earth's view. These things looked very much like Earth, the Mariner project's director, James Casey, said.

"In particular, the spacecraft is investigating whether Mercury's surface and other scientific instruments may be able to detect the planet's magnetic field," Casey said.

Phosphorous shortage could be eased

By PHILIP G. BONESELL
WASHINGTON, D.C. — A report released and a bill introduced in Congress to ease the phosphorous shortage by having farmers hold back their use of the fertilizer until their crops are harvested.

The report, released by the Agriculture Department, says that the near-term outlook for phosphorous is grim, with the shortage expected to continue through the coming years.

The report says that the shortage is due to the high cost of phosphorous, which is currently at about $8.20 per tonne, and that the NFO says that such a reduction in the price aid for phosphorous would help keep the price on the farm at about $3 per tonne.

The report also says that the current use value of phosphorous is about $14 per tonne, and that the NFO says that the current use value of phosphorous is about $14 per tonne.

For dairy farmer David Morrill and his family, the energy crisis is one more concern in a daily routine that already includes a host of other problems.

"There seems to be a new problem every day," he said.

Despite the recent energy crisis, the Morrills were able to get by without it, he said.

"The only thing I'm afraid of is losing the horse," he said.

Morrill is a little worried about the energy crisis, as are most people.

"We have a good supply of hay, but it's a little tight," he said.

Morrill explained to a newsman that the energy crisis is not the only problem facing farmers.

"There are many other problems," he said.

Saints announce a major shakeup

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Minnesota Fighting Saints of the World Hockey Association have undergone a major shuffle in their coaching staff and parent club, the Minnesota North Stars.

After a meeting with the parent club, North Stars coach Bill Carlson informed the Saints organization that he would be stepping down as head coach of the Saints. He was replaced by Mike Biron, a Norton backsfielder who has served as the Saints' assistant coach for the past three seasons.

The move came as a surprise to many, but the Saints' management team felt it was necessary to make changes in order to improve the team's performance on the ice.

Carlson expressed his gratitude to the Saints organization for the opportunity to coach in the WHA, but he felt it was time to move on to other challenges.

Biron, on the other hand, was excited about the opportunity to become the head coach of the Saints.

"I'm honored to be the head coach of the Saints," Biron said. "I've been with the team for three seasons, and I've seen enough of what it takes to be successful in the WHA."

The Saints open the season against the Chicago Black Hawks on Oct. 12 at the St. Paul Civic Center.

Sports in brief

The University of Minnesota's hockey team announced that it would be seeking new coaching candidates for the upcoming season.

Martin to stay with Rangers if short sells

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Tom Gedeon, the manager of the Philadelphia Flyers, said Friday that the front office is ready to make a deal to keep Dallas Vollmer, the team's leading scorer, from becoming a free agent.

Vollmer, a 6-foot-3, 225-pound winger, has been one of the Flyers' top producers this season, scoring 25 goals and adding 43 assists in 73 games. He was a key player in the team's run to the Stanley Cup Finals last season and is expected to be a major contributor next year.

Gedeon said the Flyers are willing to pay Vollmer a raise, which would likely make him one of the league's top paid forwards. However, the team also wants to ensure it can afford to keep him long-term.

"We're going to try to make a deal that makes sense for everyone," Gedeon said. "We want him here long-term, but we also have to make sure we're not stretching ourselves too far financially."

Vollmer, who has three years left on his current contract, said he is aware of the Flyers' financial situation and understands the importance of the team's long-term plan.

"I'm not making any decisions about my future right now," Vollmer said. "I'm just focused on playing the best hockey I can and helping the team win games."

Satellites broaden higher education

By R. M. SIVIJE

UNITED NATIONS (UPI)—“Historically, satellite communications, a brainstorm of the century, could be featured as one of the highest single achievements of mankind. It has been proved to be a smooth, practical and unselfish tool of international cooperation during the past few years in various applications,” the cheesy chairman of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, Dr. C. M. Schulze, reports.

Pan-Pacific Educational Satellite, a project of UNESCO, was reported by Dr. Schulze as one of the most successful undertakings of the organization. The satellite has been in service in the Pacific for nearly three years and has made an over-all reconnaissance of the entire Pacific area, an estimated area of 4,000,000 square miles.

Respirator saves ‘little charmer’

BURLINGTON (CT) — Little Rachel Gane gave her mother a tremendous scare when she was born with a cleft palate. She was born without any self-evident deformity, but her mother noticed that she was not sleeping well at age 3. It was a sign of a problem.

Dr. J. W. J. C. L. D. of the University of the West Indies, the Department of Surgery in St. Lucia, the University of the West Indies, the University of Chile, the University of California at Los Angeles, and the University of California at Berkeley report that the respirator has been successfully used in the treatment of nine patients.

The respirator is a device that helps the patient breathe by applying constant positive pressure to the lungs. It is used to treat patients with congenital or acquired respiratory problems. The device is effective in treating a variety of conditions, including cleft palate, cystic fibrosis, and other respiratory disorders.

Ban on women dries up tables down at Mory’s

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — The tables down at Mory’s Cabaret are losing their sheen. A man has been banned for life from the popular men’s bar.

Mory’s, a New Haven institution and a hangout for Yale University students, has expelled a man named Bob for life. The decision was made after the man was caught on camera attempting to enter the bar without a pass.

Special tribute to the respirator

The respirator has been a major advancement in medical care, allowing patients with respiratory issues to breathe more comfortably and effectively. Its widespread use has saved many lives and improved the quality of life for those with respiratory conditions.
