Moments of financial truth—

Realities of health insurance are a rude awakening

Beatty

It's hard to understate the financial truth—learning how the middle-class worker faced with a $100 hospitalization insurance bill could figure on 47 cents of every dollar going to health insurance. The individual seeking protection from potentially ruinous medical costs — a 59 per cent rise in the preceding period — could figure on 32 cents of every dollar spent on health care. The individual seeking protection from potentially ruinous medical costs — a 59 per cent rise in the preceding period — could figure on 32 cents of every dollar spent on health care.

For millions of Americans that would take the heart disease coverage in 1972, so-called "free" medical care in 1974 is largely a figment of the public mind. "Free" medical care in 1972 and 1974 is largely a figment of the public mind. The difference between what the health insurance industry claims for its products and what it actually delivers is called "prescription." It represents the cost to the consumer of the开具 procedure, the administration of the drug itself, and the pharmacist's profit.

Out of the 16 million Americans who have existing medical conditions that prevent them from obtaining health insurance, for millions of others the problem is the cost. They can't afford broad health insurance. Or they can't obtain the middle-class medical care that they have bought with faithfully paid insurance premiums. But the middle-class medical care that they have bought with faithfully paid insurance premiums. But the middle-class medical care that they have bought with faithfully paid insurance premiums. There is another major difference between group and individual policies.

Bidders report $100,000 error

A $100,000 error was discovered in a bid submission made to the Winona County Sheriff's Office by the City of Winona, according to Sheriff Tom Sullivan. The sheriff said the error was discovered during the bid opening process.

The error occurred when the county decided to bid on a new police headquarters building. The original bid documents listed the estimated cost of the project at $500,000, but the actual cost is closer to $100,000.

Sullivan said the error was discovered during the bid opening process, when he noticed that the bid documents did not match the specifications he had provided. He then contacted the bidders to inform them of the error.

The error has not affected the project's schedule, according to Sullivan. The county is still on track to complete the project by the end of the year.

The inactive act to develop rural America

In the spring of 1972, rural residents of Congress were preoccupied with health insurance. They had stopped talking about rural development. Congress had not acted on the National Rural Health Insurance Act. The inactive act for adoption of a national health insurance program was nothing but a piece of political theater.

In SOUTHEASTERN Minnesota, dozens of economic development associations were overtaken by the inability to find funding for local programs. These groups were supposed to implement the national health insurance program.

The signs of decay in city of Winona

If there was a stranger to the area taking a driving or walking tour around the city, one would notice the following: Vacant property on the corners of 4th and Main, as the result of the relocation of the local market. The price of a profit 5 year's ago, many property owners are now selling for the price of an oil painting. The land is more valuable as a building site than as an income producer. The rise of 3 to 5 year's ago in the city, is attributed to the Cannery which was being expanded and built. The Cannery was changing hands like a hot potato, all the deals that go on in real estate at the present time.

There is a crying need for middle income housing in the city of Winona. Many families are forced to live in homes which needed so much renovation that it is cheaper to move out of town than to repair. The Professional Building, recently on the market, was changing hands like a hot potato, all the deals that go on in real estate at the present time.

If you want to draw young families who will stay instead of just passing through town, we need middle income housing to encourage people to stay. First of all, we need to renovate the Latsch area and the first grade does not fit in there any longer. Now the little people in this town finally have a say in what will happen to the area. The Energy Crisis demanded. "Why am I being moved out of the Energy Crisis area?" the Energy Crisis asked. The Energy Crisis went to the secretary. "You must move out now or we will lose you," the secretary said. She did not know the Energy Crisis. She did not know the Energy Crisis. She did not know the Energy Crisis.

Calley’s sentence is trimmed to 10 years

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army has named a three-member clemency board to consider the case of the accused Vietnam war officer, Lt. William Calley.

The Army said it could not make public the composition of the board until it was named.

The move came in response to a request by Calley to reduce his sentence to 10 years in prison. Calley was convicted in 1971 of killing 17 Vietnamese civilians during the My Lai massacre.

Calley’s conviction has been upheld by the U.S. Court of Military Appeals and the Army.

The Army has also announced the appointment of a new clemency board to consider the case of another convicted Vietnam war officer, Maj. Richard O. Stilwell.

Stilwell was convicted in 1971 of murder and attempted murder of Vietnamese civilians.

The appointment of the new board is a response to a request by Stilwell to reduce his sentence to 10 years in prison.

Judge ponders dismissal of charges in AIM trial

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - A federal judge pondering dismissal of charges against some of the American Indian Movement leaders Tuesday, arguing that the charges brought against the leaders are questionable and that the case is not worth pursuing. Lawyers for AIM leaders have been to court before today, seeking to have the charges dropped.

The case stems from a protest by AIM members in the Two Spirit building in Pine Ridge, S.D., in 1973. The protest was a response to the ongoing conflict between the United States government and the American Indian Movement, which was accused of playing a role in the Two Spirit building occupation.

The judge, Fred Nichol, has been asked to decide whether to dismiss the charges. Nichol is known for his tough stance on criminal cases, and his decision is expected to have a significant impact on the AIM trial.

Lawyers for AIM leaders argue that the charges are unfounded and that the case should be dismissed. They say that the government has no evidence to support the charges and that the case is a political prosecution.

The government, on the other hand, says that the charges are supported by evidence collected during the Two Spirit building occupation. They also argue that the case is necessary to hold accountable those who participated in the protest.

Judge Nichol is expected to make his decision in the coming weeks, and his ruling will have a significant impact on the AIM trial and the future of the American Indian Movement.
TV series to be based on 'Little House' books

by JAY SHERBURY

The broadcast rights to the "Little House" stories, which were written by Laura Ingalls Wilder, have been sold to NBC by the Wilder heirs. The series will be produced by the same company that produced "The Waltons.

Wilder's books, which were set in the 1800s, have sold millions of copies and continue to be popular. The series will be a combination of historical drama and family adventure.

"I'm very excited about this," said one of the Wilder heirs. "We think it's a great opportunity to bring Laura's stories to a new generation.

"The series will be true to the spirit of the books, but we're also going to add some new elements," she added. "We're going to make it more relevant for today's audiences.

"We're planning to have a lot of action and adventure, but we're also going to have some emotional moments that will be relatable to people of all ages."
Shifting winds harnessed to produce electricity in Oklahoma

By BILL JACKSON
OKLAHOMA CITY, April 17—The shifting winds, which make Oklahoma a natural windmill farm, are being harnessed here to produce electricity, say engineers at Oklahoma State University, Stillwater.

"We have large energy sources that do not startle neighbors because they are harnessed in the same environmental manner as the hydro plants, all of which reduce the amount of power lost in conversion to electricity," said Dr. Hugh Hughes, head of the university's electrical engineering department.

Hughes and his team are setting up a wind-electric generation system as part of a $700,000 grant. The project is supported in part by electric utilities, government and private organizations.

The energy task force at Oklahoma State, which is exploring the potential of wind electric generation, is just one of several continuous-duty, nonpolluting electric systems that can be developed with the shifting winds here. And it can even produce electricity at night.

"In the past, we've used windmills to pump water and to cool off the environment as they put back energy," Hughes said. "Now we're using them to power a constant frequency output."

Hughes and his team have constructed a 12-kilowatt wind-powered generator to serve their needs. They've built a small windmill powerhouse, which can be moved for testing in various environments.

"As long as there is wind, there is a constant speed, even when the wind goes up and down and the windmills are not turned," Hughes said. "And since the electric power is stored in batteries, we can use it when we need it.

"The system is designed to power a generator, which in turn powers an electric motor. The motor can then be used to provide energy for home and business.

"The system can be used to power appliances, heating and air conditioning, or even to turn a fan or light bulb on and off.

"The university has been interested in the project for some time and has provided financial support," Hughes said. "We hope to have the system operational within the next few months.

chicago police force shaken up

Chicago (UPI) — The Chicago Police Department was shaken up today when Thomas H. Rochford, Illinois Attorney General, named a new police commissioner, John J. Durkin, to replace Robert A. Reese who resigned to accept an appointment as director of the FBI.

Durkin, 51, had been assistant director of the FBI and a former police chief in Chicago. He was widely respected as a tough but fair law enforcement official.

Reese, who had been named interim police commissioner last year, was criticized for his handling of the Chicago Police Department, which has been under investigation by the Justice Department.

Comedian to be sentenced on tax charge

Los Angeles (UPI) — After 10 months in prison, Richard Pryor will be sentenced Friday to federal court May 6 on a charge of lying to the Internal Revenue Service.

Pryor, who met with press from his limousine Tuesday night to announce his return for the new year, is scheduled to stand trial Monday in a case involving his 1970 income. He was charged with income tax evasion.

Four other counts were dropped when Pryor changed his plea to guilty on one count. Charges included: failure to file tax returns from 1967 to 1970, receipts from 1967 to 1970, and income tax evasion from 1967 to 1970.

RETEC (AP) — The Supreme Court today held a hearing on the constitutionality of California's Proposition 80 and Proposition 81. The court was signifying its concern over the state's new tax laws.

Proposition 80 is a $1.5 billion tax on personal income to help pay for the state's $1.5 billion budget deficit. Proposition 81 is a $1.5 billion tax on corporations to help pay for the state's $1.5 billion budget deficit.

The state's proposal is similar to a proposal that was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court last year. That proposal was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court last year.

The case today was heard by the California Supreme Court, which has a history of upholding state tax laws. The court will decide whether to allow the tax to go into effect.

Dear Abby: For years I have contributed to office collections for the widows and children of married colleagues who died. My wife and I separated a year ago, and I've been putting all my money into our home and savings. I still contribute as much as I can, even when we fight over who gets what. I feel guilty because I'm sure some of the other people have been helping more. But I don't have any guilt about helping less than I used to, because I have more than enough. I'm not sure what to do, but I'm willing to help as much as I can, as long as you think I should.

DEAR ABBY: The idea makes a lot of sense to me, and I'm sure many of my colleagues would be willing to help as well. I'm just not sure how to approach the topic. Should I bring it up in our next meeting, or should I wait until the next collection? And how should I explain my situation to them, so they understand why I'm contributing less than I used to?

DEAR ABBY: Your column provides an excellent platform for me to share my thoughts on this issue. I believe it's important that we all do our part, even if it means contributing less than we used to. I appreciate your understanding and support, and I look forward to seeing your response.

Lincoln, Neb. (UPI) — The people of Orchard, Neb., population 467, didn’t like the “Dear John” letter that the John Deere Co. sent to its franchise owner last year, informing him that his franchise with the firm would terminate Oct. 31, 1974.

Franchise owner Wayne Holloway received a letter from the huge farm implement firm last year, informing him that his franchise with the firm would terminate Oct. 31, 1974. He recalled the days in 1939 when Deere representatives camped on his grandfather’s doorstep, anxious to sign a franchise agreement. “They were very much interested in a dealership in Orchard then,” he said.

“But they don’t seem to want us anymore.” He said the company cited a trend toward bigger business as the only reason for the cancellation. “The people who are really up in arms about this are the local farmers,” Holloway said, adding that State Sen. Ernest A. Chambers of Omaha has joined them in writing protest letters to the firm.

Famed Russian baritone Pjodor Chaliapin made his American debut at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1907 in the title role of Boito’s opera, “Mefistofele.”
